DELUSIONS OF GRANDEUR

by NOEL HUNT

"WE think Congoids unintelligent; but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or so craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidises them with its earnings and even oppresses its own people to curry their favour." [Dr Revilo Oliver in America's Decline]

THE British are frequently surprised to find that they are regarded in Europe as a joke, and that they are disliked and despised throughout Africa. They wonder why this should be so. There are excellent reasons. Britons are used to seeing in the media that their country is "to use its influence" in some matter: usually something that is no concern of ours but is dear to the heart of the trendy liberal. We learn constantly, too, that Britain "is to intervene", "to take the initiative" or "to use her moral influence". All this rhetoric gives the unthinking the impression that this country can affect events and that she has some international influence.

The brutal fact is that other countries find our intervention irrelevant and annoying, that our "initiatives" irritate people who deal in realities, and that Britain has no real influence either moral or physical. The reason is clear. In 1945 the national will to survive and to rule faltered and failed. Britain decided to become a welfare state rather than remain a world power. She was, of course, perfectly entitled to make this decision if she wished to do so. What she is not entitled to do is pretend that this decision altered nothing of her international standing, and that the results of this decision can be ignored.

It is this refusal to acknowledge facts which is so infuriating. Britain deliberately took a political decision which left her with about as much influence in the world as Botswana, yet persists in giving herself all the airs and graces of a first-class power, e.g. she plumes herself on her "special relationship" with the United States. This might have meant something once when both countries were controlled by their Anglo-Saxon majorities. Now that this is no longer the case, the so-called special relationship means nothing. The American treatment of Britain at the time of Suez should be enough to make it plain that she is no friend of ours. To the manipulators of U.S. governments, Britain is useful as an eager and assiduous lick-spittle in their joint efforts to carry out the aims of International Zionism, which comprise today the foreign policy of America. The U.S. finds Britain helpful, too, as an ally in the vicious and undeclared war now being waged on South Africa, which has as its object to detach the R.S.A. from the West and to turn it into a satrapy of the Soviets.

On the subject of Africa, Britons are often surprised to find that they are disliked and despised from one end of the continent to the other. To us, this seems ungrateful after we have given them "democracy" and in addition enormous amounts of our money described as "foreign aid". This money, of course, is highly acceptable to the tyrants who have replaced us and to their "Swiss" bankers. What have we done, we wonder, to deserve this barely veiled contempt? We forget that when we gave "freedom" to Africa we did it by doing what not even a Black Fingo would stoop to do: we turned upon and destroyed our own race and our own people. The African cannot understand a people who can do this and then boast about it. For this they despise us, and rightly.

This was bad enough. But our folly went further. Instead of insisting that this "foreign aid" should be paid for by supporting our international policies we allow these petty statelets to mock our views, to oppose us at every opportunity and regularly to vote against us in the United Nations. Our subsidies to the Third World give us power over them. To them, to have power and not to use it can only mean that one is either weak or afraid. This is how our ex-colonies see us. One can hardly doubt that they are right. They know from long experience that they may twist the lion's tail with impunity, and they do so. We tolerate and pretend to find acceptable their insolence, their inefficiency, their greed and their contemptuous dislike. Is it any wonder that they despise us?

Hypocrisy Of The Falklands Campaign

We try to conceal our lack of political will and our moral cowardice by the generous use of cant and hypocrisy. The Falklands War is a case in point. Former residents of the British Empire, now scattered worldwide, smiled grimly at the political rhetoric of this war. It will be remembered that British politicians suddenly discovered that "our kith and kin" in the Falklands were at risk. To save them, all 15,000 of them, Britain fought a war, talking loudly of the ties of blood and racial kinship. India and Africa were once inhabited by tens of thousands of "our kith and kin". Much good it did them. They were ruthlessly sacrificed by Britain intent on carrying out the anti-colonial policies of the United States.

It may suit a small, sick section of the West to pretend that racial differences do not exist, that all men are everywhere equal in all things. But the Blacks, Browns and Yellows know very well that this is not so, that there is such a thing as race and that it is an immensely powerful force. To a Black man it is inconceivable that the Whites should destroy their own children to make way for him. Yet this is what they did. For this they are despised throughout Africa: what not even a Berg Damara would do, the proud Anglo-Saxon did, and then boasted of what he had done.

We still boast of it. We cannot control our own young, we cannot enforce the law in our own inner cities, we cannot win an international football match, but in one field we remain supreme. We are the finest canters and hypocrites in the world. We always were. When in doubt the British politician still reaches for the universal panacea: a generous dollop of hypocrisy, sweetened with a little cant to help it down. It never fails, and enables us to support our degradation as we grovel before the African or the Asian in an attempt to appease him and to please his American masters and their Zionist rulers. It is not a pretty sight.

In his essay World War Two and Britain (sub-titled Twenty Years of Decline), James J. Martin aptly remarks: "It has been rare in human history that the public affairs of a great nation have been in the hands of such a large group of sometimes well-meaning but thoroughly incompetent bunglers as has been the fate of Britain in the last four decades. In this manner was a great people brought down."

So low has this once great people been brought, and so great is the power of the oft-repeated lie, that its spokesmen profess to believe that racial discrimination among humans is evil, even though by rigorous selection and discrimination we breed the world's best livestock; that all men everywhere differ not at all in intelligence, foresight and organising ability; that there is no such thing as stupidity, only lack of opportunity; and a dozen other lunatic figments of the liberal imagination.

It is not only Lewis Carroll's Red Queen in Through The Looking Glass who can believe six impossible things before breakfast. Any British liberal can, and does. What is more, "world opinion" and our own communications media support his views to the hilt. Also, they act most swiftly and efficiently to silence any attempt to state another point of view. How else could we, by our own choice devoid of principle and morally bankrupt, be brought to read of Britain's "moral influence" in the world without laughing out loud?

SAVE OUR COUNTRY FROM EUROPEAN SLAVERY

ABSTAIN ON EURO-ELECTION DAY!

THE Lord Mayor of Portsmouth is urging Hampshire people to use their votes in next month's Euro-Parliament elections. His plea falls on deaf ears as far as we are concerned. To take any part in the Euro-election, even by spoiling a vote, is an act of sedition. Accordingly, we urge all patriots to take British Action in June and ABSTAIN, and persuade others to ABSTAIN, too.

Enclosed with this issue of Candour is a copy of our Treason! poster. Please take further British Action by displaying it in your window, in your car or in any suitable public place. And if you are willing to go to town on plastering them all over your neighbourhood, we can supply further copies in bulk at a minimal charge.

We fought to keep Britain out of the European Community and failed. We simply must do everything not to fail this time to reject the subjugation of this land of ours to foreign rule. We dare call it treason!

Read SPEARHEAD. Edited by John Tyndall and published in support of the British National Party. Sample copy 85p or annual subscription £10. Available from P.O. Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE DEFENDERS OF SALMAN RUSHDIE'S RIGHTS

by ERNST ZUNDEL

I AM a writer and publisher whose books were and still are seized at the Canadian borders, banned by Canada Customs and subject to criminal prosecution. I had my postal privileges revoked for a year, and had them restored only after an expensive legal battle.

I have been charged and dragged through lengthy court proceedings which bordered on a classic totalitarian-style show trial. The Judge presiding over this trial so twisted the laws out of shape that five Appeal Court Judges overturned the verdict and this ruling was upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada! Nevertheless, I was re-charged within twenty minutes of the Supreme Court's ruling and underwent another four month trial, all for the writings of another man which I had merely reprinted. I was then once again tried in a court presided over by a Judge who bent the rules out of shape and overturned long-held legal traditions. I was convicted again and given a nine month jail term! The Appeal is now being worked on while I am totally silenced by a "judicial gag order".

Campaign Of Terrorism

While I have gone through these legal proceedings, my home has been bombed, my car severely damaged. I have been assaulted and beaten to the ground by hysterical demonstrators and I have been punched, spat at, and hit over the head with sticks on the court house steps. I have been set on fire while handcuffed and in police custody! I have been kicked out of lecture halls, had talks cancelled, been banned from entering Austria and the U.S.A. I have suffered relentless telephoned abuse, bomb and arson threats...all this because I dared to question a dogma, not for insulting the prophet Mohammed.

The Ayatollah in my case were the writers and broadcasters as well as the politicians and Judges of this land. The very hypocrites who so loudly demand freedom of speech for Rushdie, demanded and still demand that I be jailed, deported and permanently silenced for blasphemy! My crime? I blasphemed the temporal dogma of the Western world, what they like to call "the Holocaust".

Forgive me if I think little of your efforts and if I don't believe in the sincerity of your motives. For all your mouthings are not worth the paper they are printed on. You are cowards and hypocrites!

Editor's note: Yes, isn't it ironic that at this very moment as such great concern is feigned about allowing Rushdie "freedom of speech", Canada's strutting politicians continue to sanction the judicial persecution of the intrepid Ernst Zundel, whose sole "crime" is that he published an edition of Richard Harwood's Did Six Million Really Die? The hypocrisy is no less intense here in England. David Irving has had to travel the country bringing his important book on Churchill to the notice of the small and independent booksellers still to be found. John Tyndall, leader of the British National Party, found himself imprisoned for six months for daring to state in print in Spearhead what most ordinary people in Britain think and say about the colour problem.

AN EMPHASIS ON THE SPIRITUAL

by FRANK BROOKES

WHEN I reviewed John Tyndall's The Eleventh Hour for Candour I said it was a pity that in this massive and brilliant Nationalist work there was virtually no reference to philosophy or religion. This gap in Nationalist writing and thinking has been somewhat remedied, though not without flaws, in Derek Holland's The Political Soldier, sub-titled Thoughts on Sacrifice and Struggle. This slim volume is entirely religious and philosophical in tone and I recommend it to all Nationalists who are sometimes worried about the materialist/eugenic thinking that emerges from time to time in Nationalist publications.

However, Mr Holland's own work needs to be read critically in the true meaning of that term. That is, it must be evaluated. He nowhere specifically mentions Christianity, though there are many oblique references that indicate it is, in fact, Christian ideas and beliefs that motivated the book. He quotes from St Thomas Aquinas, for example, and such Catholic writers as Christopher Dawson. Like John Tyndall, Mr Holland insists on the need for an inner, spiritual renewal if any new form of Nationalist society is to succeed. Unlike J.T., he does give some indication, some idea, of how that might be achieved. But having said that, I must say that in my view he leaves some basic questions unanswered.

Nationalism's New Man

Derek Holland insists, quite rightly, that before a New Order (presumably a better Order!) can come into existence a New Man must be born. But the only way a New Man can come into being is via Christianity, and Christianity is not limited to Nationalists and Nationalism. Christianity is compatible with Nationalism, but not identical with it. We must avoid trying to tie Christianity in with any particular form of government. This is the error made by our present day "democrats". The New Man, as Mr Holland appreciates, is new because of a spiritual transformation. This transformation will help him become more honest, more courageous, more selfless. It may lead him into the Nationalist movement - it may not.

Mr Holland criticises our present materialist-capitalist society, and rightly so, but I feel that he does not allow it sufficient credit for actually providing the high standard of living we enjoy. Any New Order would need to improve on that to be acceptable, while at the same time fostering the truly noble ideals of love of peoples, courage, purity and self-sacrifice that the author holds up for example and which are, as he correctly says, lacking in current British society. Where he is unquestionably right, and this is a point that really requires emphasis in Nationalist thinking, is in insisting on the Objectiveness of Truth and Reality and rejecting Relativism. "We must ask ourselves, as aspirant Political Soldiers," he writes, "whether or not we can accept this modern assertion: are all opinions equally valid?"

He denies that multi-racialism as an idea is equally valid as "independent and homogeneous cultures working out their destinies fully and undisturbed". In our time and surroundings, when Christian leaders (!) are insisting without argument that multi-racialism is the only way to show Christian love, Mr Holland's statement is a timely and valuable contribution to Nationalist thinking, though clearly it needs development. He is also right on the ball when he writes that to live properly Man must recognise he is both spirit and matter, and that spirit has primacy. He points to strong family life as being the basis on which a successful nation must rest, rightly condemning that major evil of our day, abortion. It is also rightly observed that "Man does not exist to serve society, rather society exists to serve Man in his quest for spiritual perfection and a modicum of temporal happiness".

If Nationalism is ever to succeed in this country, somehow or other the various "splinter groups" will have to merge into some kind of coherent political offering that can be presented to the people as a realistic platform. Holland's work is a worthy part of a general Nationalist offering. It does, admittedly, exude a youthful idealism (there is nothing wrong in that) rather than an experience of practical politics. But his emphasis on the spiritual and super-natural is important. After all, thought itself is super-natural and spiritual. If it is not, then it is purely a product of matter, the brain producing thought, as someone once said, as the liver produces bile. But if that were so, then thought would be nothing more and nothing less than different bits of matter combining in different people to produce different ideas - none of which could possibly be true. All would be "equal".

Derek Holland's recognition of the Objectiveness of Truth and the role of the spiritual in Nationalist politics is an important contribution to our thinking.

Editor's note: Another worthwhile publication available from Burning Books is the new N.F. booklet exposing the shadowy characters responsible for Searchlight, the so-called "anti-Fascist" smear-sheet run by "ex-Communists" and financed by Zionists. The Other Face Of Searchlight marks the first serious effort by nationalists to document the activities of this unsavoury bunch. Price £2 including postage.

BISHOP CHEW CHEW

"Do as I say, not as I do"
Pontificates, thus, the Bishop Tutu.
His flock and some others
He encourages, "Fast,
Sisters and Brothers
As martyrs be cast!
Meanwhile, at the table I'll take my seat,
Wining and dining until surfeit,
Steaks sweet and tender, biltong more tough
Rest ye assured there will be enough.
No church-mouse am I, minute and spare
That's out of keeping with this lion's share.
So with Grace for my bounty - and your sacrifice
To hunger for principle is ever so nice;
Likewise there's merit in my nourishment
Staying fit to ensure your sustained punishment!

B.E. BIGGS

THE FUTURE THREAT TO THE WHITE WORLD

"THE material and political power of Islam declined very rapidly during the 18th and 19th centuries. When Sulieman the Magnificent was besieging Vienna he had better artillery, better energies and better everything than his opponents; Islam was still in the field the material superior of Christendom - at least it was the superior in fighting power and fighting instruments. That was within a very few years of the opening of the 18th century. Then came the inexplicable decline. The religion did not decay, but its political power and with that its material power declined astonishingly, and in the particular business of arms it declined most of all. When Dr Johnson's father, the book-seller, was setting up in business at Lichfield, the Grand Turk was still dreaded as a potential conqueror of Europe; before Dr Johnson was dead no Turkish army or fleet could trouble the West. Not a lifetime later, the Mohammedan in North Africa had fallen subject to the French; and those who were then young men lived to see nearly all Mohammedan territory firmly subdued by the French and British governments. These things being so, the recrudescence of Islam, the possibility of that terror under which we lived for centuries reappearing, and of our civilisation again fighting for its life against what was its chief enemy for a thousand years, seems fantastic....There is no leader as yet, but enthusiasm might bring one and there are signs enough in the political heavens of today of what we may have to expect from the revolt of Islam at some future date - perhaps not far distant."

THUS wrote Hilaire Belloc in The Great Heresies in 1938. Looking around the Middle East at the rapid spread of militant Islam, or here at home at the millions of Muslims already filtered into the cities of Western Europe, Belloc's words have a prophetic ring. The Islamic England of G.K. Chesterton's Flying Inn is not necessarily the amusing absurdity it seemed in 1914; indeed, it could be a very real prospect as a consequence of the emerging global power-struggle of the early 21st century. For a fascinating viewpoint on "What Comes After The 'East-West' Conflict", see the latest issue of Vanguard, available from P.O. Box 634, Hove, East Sussex BN3 5FZ, price £1 including postage.

CREDIT WHERE IT'S NOT DUE

"IDLY I glanced at something dropping out of a colour supplement. It was from Barclays Bank. 'Assent,' they said. 'The smart new way to manage your money.' They ask: 'Isn't this a more sensible way to use plastic? The cost is very sensible...equivalent to an annual percentage rate of 19.9 per cent for purchases. A rate we think speaks for itself.' Twenty per cent interest does indeed speak for itself. It speaks of usury. By claiming that 19.9 per cent is a 'special low interest rate' they encourage borrowing. They create credit. They make inflation worse. Chancellor Lawson hopes to reduce inflation by making borrowing more expensive with high interest rates. He would do better to make lending less profitable. Usury is illegal as far as pawnbrokers are concerned. It is time to treat the banks like the pawnbrokers."

- George Gale in the Daily Mail, 31st March 1989.

[Usury, we can never say too often, is the creation and/or lending of money at interest - Editor.]

FROM OUR FAN MAIL

4th April, 1989

DEAR Mr Chesterton [sic!]

I have marvelled over the years at your capacity for controlled invective. Your insults and spleen provide an art form on their own. Never a constructive proposal of any sort so far as I can remember but pure malice, hatred and desire to destroy. That there are certain species of human beings whom you appear to detest is clear and that you somehow blame them for all the troubles that have ever happened to mankind, but never a constructive proposal!

When I have come across these streams of intense bitterness in others I have usually found that their source is in some dissatisfaction in their genetic background. Would you please answer me quite frankly and let me know who your parents were and exactly to what race they belonged. If they were of 100% British born then I think you must be unique in having acquired the degree of bitterness towards those of other races that you seem to murse. I am sure you are a truly honest man and, therefore, will have no hesitation in letting me know the answer to these questions.

OLIVER SMEDLEY,
Garden Cottage, Duck Street, Wendens Ambo, Saffron Walden, Essex.

Editor's note: Is Mr Smedley really as ludicrous a character as his letter suggests? Perhaps some of our readers who have encountered this failed Liberal Party election candidate in the anti-EEC cause would write in and let us know. In the meantime, we suggest Mr Smedley directs his question to A.K.C. via his nearest spiritualist medium in view of the fact our founder died sixteen years ago!

A CASE FOR THE RACE RELATIONS COMMISSARS?

"WORD-WATCHING: A daily safari through the language jungle. Which of the possible definitions is correct?

"JOEY: (a) A male canary. (b) A stool-pigeon. (c) A child thief.

"ANSWER: (c) A school-child coerced into stealing and other criminal acts by older children, typically members of teenage gangs. 'A gang of six black teenagers bullied and terrorised four younger schoolboys, nicknamed Joeys, into carrying out a series of muggings.'"
